

REMEMBERING RABBI INDICH

Rabbi David Indich was a spiritual mentor to my entire family for many years. I got to know him personally from attending synagogue with my father, who studied with him and drove him home after the Sabbath, and in preparation for my Bar Mitzvah.

I admired him greatly for his intelligence, sense of humor, and compassionate leadership of Golf Manor Synagogue. In fact, during Rabbi Indich's tenure at Golf Manor, he made the synagogue the center of Orthodox Jewish worship in Cincinnati for over three decades. I believe that his success was due in large part to his unique skill in bringing people together and his ability to make Jewish learning accessible to others.

In addition, Rabbi Indich inspired Jews to be more observant mainly through his own example as well as the welcoming environment he established at the synagogue. He helped to lay the foundation of my own observance, and I believe that his example lives on in the people he inspired.

When we were still new in the community, Malkah got a call that her mother was dying. Jeff called Rabbi Indich just to let him know. Even though he was quite ill, Rabbi Indich appeared at our door within 10 minutes to offer his support. We were very grateful. It was clear to us how important even new members of his congregation were to him.
