

FORWARD

In our age the world of science is progressing at a fantastic, unprecedented pace. The manifestation of this unearthly acceleration is the Hydrogen long-stemmed mushroom rising above the spent force of a million bombs which were conventional twenty years ago.

This Kfitzas Haderech in the world of science is not accidental nor is it difficult to understand . . . . Undistracted, singleminded devotion to the problem by the experts who have dedicated their all to work and studies related only to their field. . . . The world at large has come to understand better and better that the specialist can do the most outstanding job.

The spectacle of the strides of science has captivated our senses. However, sometimes we fail to grasp the secret of this brilliant success. We forget that this came about through tireless concentration by the experts who were charged by an enlightened society with the exclusive responsibility of carrying out their task.

The essence of the 'Jewish problem' for Torah Jewry is the task of keeping the body of the Jewish people from separating from its life-element, the Torah Hak'dosha. There are countless problems facing Jewish communities, of multi-faceted natures. There are sociological, economic, political and religious problems, and there is also the problem of maintaining the flow of life-breath
