

very first day of school the student body goes on "strike" because they are anti-quotes and feel schools should be free and open to all. To produce this story at least twenty black-outs were used. It was just too jerky a production with so many scenes.

Thus "The World of Sholom Aleichem" came to an end. There can be no doubt that much was lost in the translation from Yiddish into English, but even the presentation in English was not up to par for a professional group.

FRIDAY AT HILLEL

Hillel House glowed with lights on Friday night of Hanukah. The services opened with the traditional lighting of the Menorah, and with the lighting of the candles, the Hanukah blessing was given. Readers Phyllis Ritter and Barbara Gittleman helped lead the worship service. The program was given by Steve Scheiner, Libby Roodine, and Doris Drucker, who presented a skit portraying the origin and meaning of Hanukah. Following the skit, a folk-dance demonstration was given by Allen Ehrlich, Steve Scheiner, and Phyllis Scheinbaum. With the singing of "Rock of Ages", the worship service was brought to a close. Then students participated in songs and dances.
